Thoughts for Prayer SHALOM

During Mass, there is the solemn Prayer called the Preface before the Consecration. In this prayer we address God as “Father, all-powerful and living God.” Some scholars have made a thoughtful suggestion that chapter 17 of Saint John’s Gospel is Jesus’ Preface before his sacrifice upon the cross. At several points during this Gospel, Jesus speaks about his “hour”. Now he addresses his Father with the words “Father, the hour has come.” He thus surrenders his whole life into God’s hands and affirms that his coming sacrifice upon the cross is the great hour of grace when he will accomplish the purpose of his life on earth, the meaning of the incarnation, for this “hour” is the time of our salvation.

Of course, indirectly John has been subtly teaching us that everything which Jesus said and did was a part of the work of our redemption. Now he perfects all that he has said and done in the great act of self-sacrificing love. Yet this is not something he does merely by himself, and so he must preface his death with this solemn prayer to the Father, for this is “the work that you gave me to do.”

Father in Heaven, may my death be the accomplishment and perfecting of the work which you gave me to do.

Jesus came down to earth on a mission. Having accomplished the mission, He returns to God. His Father, Luke, in a few sentences, summarizes all that Jesus said and did for generations to come. Though Jesus’ mission is done, the great mission of God’s universal salvation, however, has only just begun. It is to the disciples, whom Jesus had formed and prepared, the commission is given to carry it out by preaching the Gospel and by baptizing people. Those baptized are to know that they have an inheritance, a great glory, similar to the one, enjoyed by Christ himself.
